TASK 2: Feelings and Emotions

Paragraph A: Understanding Emotions

Understanding emotions is an essential part of mental health. People who can identify their feelings and talk about them often experience fewer emotional problems. For example, those who feel anxious (1) before an exam may benefit from breathing techniques or talking to a friend. In more serious cases, someone might experience depression (2), which affects mood and daily functioning. It's important to recognise the early symptoms (3) and seek help when needed. Support from loyal (4) friends and family can make a big difference. Educators are now including emotional education as part of school programs, helping students learn how to manage their emotions. This kind of introduction (5) has proven especially helpful during times of crisis. Experts also recommend using a mental health application (6) to track feelings and stress levels. TASK 3: Public Health & Environment

T3-2024-2025-Grade 12Advanced- Grammar&MAZE

Governments around the world are recognising the connection between public health and the environment. Studies show that living in areas with green spaces can improve physical activity levels and reduce stress, which has a significant (1) effect on well-being. Exposure to pollution, on the other hand, increases the risk of respiratory problems and mental health conditions such as depression (2). In some cities, large areas have been converted (3) into parks and walking zones to promote healthy lifestyles. These changes require a considerable (4) amount of planning and investment. It's important that city planners design spaces that are accessible and relevant (5) to the people who use them. When communities feel connected to their local environment, they are more likely to protect it. In this way, environmental improvements can also strengthen social ties, creating more enthusiastic (6) and motivated citizens. Urban planning, therefore, must consider both the
