Mobile phones: should they be banned in public places?

Many people have mixed feelings about the use of mobile phones in public places like restaurants and cinemas. Whereas they were almost unknown around thirty years ago, these days they are part of everyone's life, and the world would now feel a strange place without them.

One of the strongest arguments in favor of banning mobile phones is the annoyance they cause other people. Although people are asked to turn off their mobiles when they go to the cinema, you can be sure that the film you are watching will be interrupted by the sound of at least five ringing tones! What is more many people insist on continuing their conversation, even though hundreds of people can hear them! For this reason many people would welcome a ban on mobile phones in places where they might irritate other people.

On the other hand there are a number of arguments against such a ban. It is really difficult to stop people bringing their mobile phones into public places, and therefore it would be virtually impossible to enforce any ban. Some people would see this as an infringement of their rights, while others would say they need them in case of an emergency. And despite being asked to turn their mobile phones off, some people insist on leaving them on, or simply forget to silence them. Perhaps the most important part is that, in spite of all the disadvantages, many people these days simply feel that they can't live without their mobile.

It seems to me that a ban on mobile phones would be pointless. People will always find a way round any ban. Nevertheless, people should be discouraged from using them in places like restaurants, unless it is absolutely necessary. People should be made aware that it's very bad manners to use them at certain times. However, there will always be someone who thinks their call is much more important than other people's peace and quiet!

Questions:

1.The text implies that.....

- a. all people are for the ban of phones in public places
- b. all people are against the ban of phones in public places
- c. some people are for the ban while others are against

2.The writer thinks that.....

- a. many mobile users are not concerned about the privacy of their conversation
- b. people are always worried about their privacy on the phone
- c. people always worry about being overheard on the phone

3. People who are not in favor of the ban argue that.....

- a. this is a violation of their personal freedom
- b. they need the phone for entertainment
- c. phones are necessary to communicate with their family and friends

4. The writer concludes that

- a. the efforts to enforce the ban will succeed
- b. it is useless to try to enforce the ban
- c. it is not urgent to enforce the ban

5. Which advice does the writer give us?

- a. We ought to always switch mobile phones off in public places
- b. We should keep on using phones in public places as we can't live without them
- c. Unless it is really needed we should avoid using phones in public places

A) What is Nonverbal Communication

Nonverbal communication is a way to share information without speaking. It includes many different cues, like facial expressions, hand gestures, body language eye contact and tone of voice. It allows you to show feelings and ideas through your actions, movements and the way you present yourself.

Some signals can strengthen a conversation, like a smile or a nod. Others, like offering too strong a handshake and slouching in a chair, may send different messages. Learning to notice and adjust these cues is an important step in building your nonverbal communication skills.

It's important to remember that types of nonverbal communication can mean different things in different cultures. For example, in some cultures, eye contact shows respect, while in others it may feel uncomfortable.

B) Why is nonverbal communication important?

Nonverbal communication is important because it helps people fully understand what you mean. Without it, conversations can feel flat. This is a reason why we add emoticons or emojis to emails or text messages to help readers understand our meaning and tone. It would also be hard to sense feelings if body language and tone didn't exist.

It builds stronger connections, too. A gesture or tone of voice can show care, comfort and understanding in ways words alone can't.

Sometimes, nonverbal communication can replace speech. For example, sign languages use hand movements, facial expressions and body language to share ideas and feelings without spoken words.

C) How much of communication is nonverbal?

A large part of communication is nonverbal. How much exactly is up for debate. This means people often rely on more than just words to understand each other. Tone of voice, facial expressions and body language all play a major role.

In many everyday situations, nonverbal cues can carry as much or more meaning than spoken words, especially when emotions are involved. For example, you may notice someone's mood from how they sound or move before they explain how they feel.

Words are still important. But they're only one part of communication. Most messages are understood through a combination of words, tone and body language, not words alone.

Paying attention to all of these signals helps you better understand what someone is feeling or trying to say.

D) How to improve your nonverbal communication skills

Here are simple ways you can strengthen your nonverbal communication skills:

Face the person you're talking to: Turning your body toward someone shows you're interested and present.

Keep an open posture: Try not to cross your arms or hunch over. An open posture helps people feel comfortable around you.

Lean in slightly: A small lean forward shows you're paying attention. But be mindful of personal space.

Make comfortable eye contact: Looking toward someone's face shows you're listening. If direct eye contact feels hard, brief glances toward their face also work.

Relax: Tension in your shoulders, arms or hands may send the wrong message. Take a breath and let your body loosen.

Use gestures: Smiling, nodding or a simple wave can encourage the other person to keep sharing.

Be aware of your voice: Speak at a calm pace and volume. Try to match the tone to what you want to express and avoid interrupting.

Show empathy: Small touches (like a handshake or pat on the shoulder) can show care and support. But only do it if the other person is comfortable with it and it's appropriate to the situation. For example, a handshake at the end of a meeting.

Questions:

1. The main idea of the text is that...

- a. Spoken language and body language are equally important.
- b. verbal communication is more important than nonverbal one.
- c. nonverbal communication is more expressive than verbal communication.

2. Mark the following statement as TRUE, FALSE, or NOT GIVEN:

“People who use only body language suffer from a neurological trouble”

- a. TRUE
- b. FALSE
- c. NOT GIVEN

3. We can understand from the text that ...

- a. the use of spoken words is irreplaceable.
- b. body language always has a stronger effect on the addressee.
- c. nonverbal communication can sometimes be a stronger alternative.

4. Which word in section B has the same meaning as the word “feelings”?

- a. expressions
- b. emotions
- c. messages

5. The main idea of section B is...

- a. The benefits of nonverbal communication.
- b. The drawbacks of nonverbal communication.
- c. The difficulty to understand nonverbal communication.

6. What are two ways to improve our nonverbal communication?

- a. loud voice and physical closeness
- b. body position and movements
- c. antipathy and tension

7. We can infer from the text that the writer

- a. Encourages people to use appropriate body language
- b. Believes that body language sends wrong messages
- c. Thinks that body languages plays a minor role in communication

8. Section A suggests that...

- a. Body language has worldwide codes
- b. body language differs from one culture to another
- c. body language is similar everywhere

9. What word form is the word “respect” in section A?

- a. Verb
- b. Noun
- c. Adjective

10) In which section of the text would the following sentence fit?

“Standing or sitting at a comfortable distance helps others feel safe and respected.”

- a. B
- b. C
- c. D

11. Which word in section C has the opposite meaning of the word “agitated”

- a. brief
- b. simple
- c. calm

12. The aim of this text is to...

- a. entertain
- b. inform
- c. describe

13. How can people's feelings be understood through body language?

- a. Dress and look
- b. Physical appearance and size
- c. Temperament and body movements.

14. In section D the writer infers that

- a. Nonverbal communication skills are genetical
- b. Nonverbal communication skills can be developed
- c. nonverbal communication skills should only be taught in schools.

15. According to the text which of the following is not a form of nonverbal communication?

- a. Social media texts
- b. smiling
- c. emojis

The Rise of Online Education

A) In recent years, online education has transformed the way people learn. Once considered an alternative form of study, it has now become a core part of modern education systems worldwide. With the rise of digital technology and increased internet access, students of all ages can now learn from anywhere, at any time.

B) Online education offers many advantages. It allows flexibility—students can study at their own pace and fit learning around their personal schedules. It also provides access to a wide range of resources, such as recorded lectures, interactive quizzes, and discussion forums. For students in remote areas, online learning creates opportunities that traditional classrooms may not offer.

C) However, online learning also has its challenges. Without in-person interaction, some students struggle to stay motivated or feel isolated. Teachers must also find new ways to engage students and ensure active participation in virtual classrooms.

Reading 3

D) Despite these challenges, online education continues to grow and evolve. Advances in technology, such as virtual reality and artificial intelligence, are making online learning more interactive and personalized. In the future, a blend of online and in-person learning—known as hybrid learning—may become the new standard.

E) Online education is not just a temporary solution; it's shaping the future of learning. With the right balance of technology, discipline, and support, it has the power to make education more accessible and inclusive for everyone.

Questions:

1. The main idea of the text is ...

- a. The downsides of distant education
- b. The benefits and disadvantages of digital education
- c. The differences between online and physical education

2. Mark the following statement as TRUE, FALSE, or NOT GIVEN: "Online education has started in the US in the early 1960s"

- a. TRUE
- b. FALSE
- c. NOT GIVEN

3. We can understand from the text that the writer...

- a. is pro online education
- b. is not in favor of online education
- c. has a neutral position about online education

4. Which word in section D has the same meaning as the word "develop and progress"?

- a. evolve
- b. blend
- c. become

Questions:

5. The main idea of section C is...

- a. Unreliable internet connections
- b. The barriers facing online learning
- c. Participation in virtual classrooms

6. What is the cause that mostly contributed to the rise of online education?

- a. modern education systems
- b. the rise of pandemics
- c. technological advances

7. We can infer from the text that

- a. In-school education is more profitable for students
- b. Distance learning is prevailing all over the world
- c. Online education has no future

8. Section E suggests that...

- a. online learning can improve students' discipline
- b. online learning can be useful if implemented properly
- c. online learning is highly beneficial only for colleges and universities

9. What word form is the word "accessible" in section E?

- a. Verb
- b. Noun
- c. Adjective

Questions:

10. In which section of the text would the following sentence fit?
“Technical issues, like unreliable internet connections, can disrupt lessons”.

- a. A
- b. C
- c. D

11. Which word in section B has the opposite meaning of the word “drawbacks”

- a. advantages
- b. resources
- c. opportunities

12. The aim of this text is to...

- a. entertain
- b. inform
- c. describe

13. What is meant by “Hybrid Learning” in section D?

- a. Interactive learning
- b. Project based learning
- c. A mixture of online and physical education

14. In section A the writer infers that online education...

- a. Fits all age groups
- b. Doesn't fit young kids
- c. Works better for high school students

15. According to the text which of the following is not an advantage of online education?

- a. Lower education fees
- b. Variety of learning materials
- c. Easy accessibility

Making Every Drop Count

A) The history of human civilization is entwined with the history of the ways we have learned to manipulate water sources. As towns gradually expanded, water was brought from increasingly remote sources, leading to sophisticated engineering efforts such as dams and aqueducts. At the height of the Roman empire, nine major systems, with an innovative layout of pipes and well-built sewers, supplied the occupants of Rome with as much water per person as is provided in many parts of the industrial world today.

B) During the industrial revolution and population explosion of the 19th and 20th centuries, the demand for water rose dramatically. Unprecedented construction of tens of thousands of monumental engineering projects designed to control floods, protect clean water supplies, and provide water for irrigation and hydropower brought great benefits to hundreds of millions of people. Food production has kept pace with soaring populations mainly because of the expansion of artificial irrigation systems that make possible the growth of 40% of the world's food. Nearly one fifth of all the electricity generated worldwide is produced by turbines spun by the power of falling water.

C) Yet there is a dark side to this picture: despite our progress, half of the world's population still suffers, with water services inferior to those available to the ancient Greeks and Romans. As the United Nations report on access to water reiterated in November 2001, more than one billion people lack access to clean drinking water; some two and a half billion do not have adequate sanitation services. Preventable water-related diseases kill an estimated 10,000 to 20,000 children every day, and the latest evidence suggest that we are falling behind in efforts to solve these problems.

D) The consequences of our water policies extend beyond jeopardizing human health. Tens of millions of people have been forced to move from their homes- often with little warning or compensation- to make way for the reservoirs behind dams. More than 20% of all freshwater fish species are now threatened or endangered because dams and water withdrawals have destroyed the free-flowing river ecosystems where they thrive. Certain irrigation practices degrade soil quality and reduce agricultural productivity. Groundwater aquifers*are being pumped down faster than they are naturally replenished in parts of India, China, the USA and elsewhere.

E) At the outset of the new millennium, however, the way resource planners think about water is beginning to change. The focus is slowly shifting back to the provision of basic human and environmental needs as top priority – ensuring “some for all,” instead of “more for some”. Some water experts are now demanding that existing infrastructure be used in smarter ways rather than building new facilities, which is increasingly considered the option of last, not first, resort. This shift in philosophy has not been universally accepted, and it comes with strong opposition from some established water organizations, nevertheless, it may be the only way to address successfully the pressing problems of providing everyone with clean water to drink, adequate water to grow food and a life free from preventable water-related illness.

F) Fortunately – and unexpectedly – the demand for water is not rising as rapidly as some predicted. As a result the pressure to build new water infrastructures has diminished over the past two decades. Although population, industrial output and economic productivity have continued to soar in developed nations, the rate at which people withdraw water from aquifers, rivers and lakes has slowed. And in a few parts of the world, demand has actually fallen.

Reading 4

G) What explains this remarkable turn of events? Two factors: people have figured out how to use water more efficiently, and communities are rethinking their priorities for water use, throughout the first three-quarters of the 20th century, the quantity of fresh water consumed per person doubled on average; in the USA, water withdrawals increased tenfold while the population quadrupled. But since 1980, the amount of water consumed per person has actually decreased, thanks to a range of new technologies that help to conserve water in homes and industry. In 1965, for instance, Japan used approximately 13 million gallons * of water to produce one million of commercial output; by 1989 this had dropped to 3.5 million gallons (even accounting for inflation) – almost a quadrupling of water productivity. In the USA, water withdrawals have fallen by more than 20% from their peak in 1980.

H) On the other hand, dams, aqueducts and other kinds of infrastructures will still have to be built, partially in developing countries where basic human needs have not been met. But such projects must be built to higher specifications and with more accountability to local people and their environment than in the past. And even in regions where new projects seem warranted, we must find ways to meet demands with fewer resources, respecting ecological criteria and to a smaller budget.

Questions:

1. The main idea of the text is to...

- a. invent new methods of water conservation.
- b. compare water consumption in the past and now.
- c. to value the importance of water.

2. Mark the following statement as TRUE, FALSE. or NOT GIVEN:

“Modern water systems imitate those of the ancient Greeks and Romans”

- a. TRUE
- b. False
- c. Not given

3. The writer pointed out that the rising demand for water during the industrial revolution...

- a. damaged water resources
- b. led to the invention of new water conservation technologies
- c. made people consume more electricity

4. In which section would the following sentence fit?

“And disputes over shared water resources have led to violence and continue to raise local, national and even international tensions”

- a. D
- b. F
- c. H

Questions:

5. Which word is opposite to the word “soaring” in section B?

- a. decreasing
- b. increasing
- c. floating

6. In section G the writer implies that...

- a. water consumption decreased in the first three quarters of the 20th century.
- b. water consumption augmented in the last quarter of the 20th century.
- c. water consumption diminished towards the end of the 20th century.

7. We can infer from the text that...

- a. modern ways of manipulating water resources are more successful than those of Ancient Romans and Greeks.
- b. modern water policies have caused health and environmental issues.
- c. The UN has successfully dealt with water problems throughout the globe.

8. By the end of the 20th century water productivity increased because...

- a. industries in the US and Japan thrived.
- b. many new projects were built in developing countries.
- c. people developed smarter ways of consumption

Section Two: Reading Mazes

Maze 1:

Stereotypes are simple, one-dimensional portrayals of people - usually based (at – on – over) 1) ----- sex, race, profession or age. Most of us stereotype people to some extent as we try to understand the world.

Filmmakers relied heavily on stereotypes in the past (therefore - because – moreover) 2)-----they were a quick and easy way to create a movie character’s personality: for example, blonde women were dumb, foreigners were villains, Mexicans were lazy, and blacks were great athletes. Teenagers tended (to be – being – been) 3) -----thrown into two categories, popular kids or geeks.

The film industry today has become more sensitive to issues of culture and gender than it was in the old days of Hollywood. Many movies, however, still encourage common concepts about groups of people. The way Native Americans (has been – was – are) 4)-----shown in westerns is a good example of how negative stereotyping can distort the history and understanding of another culture.

Such oversimplified and inaccurate characterizations can deeply influence how we relate to one another. Because children have limited experience of the world, they're particularly vulnerable (to have been - to being – to be) 5) ----- influenced by media stereotypes, even in animated movies. The kindly grandfather in Pinocchio, the wicked stepmother in Cinderella, even the heroic male lion in the Lion King are all stereotypes known and (understand – understanding – understood) 6) ----- by children.

Maze 2:

Choose the most appropriate word to complete the paragraph

Change happens constantly as the last 50 years have proved. Some changes, such as air travel, the Internet and mobile phones, provide ease and convenience. Others, like access to education, (a. had had b. will have c. have had) 1) ----- a deeper impact.

Nothing has had a bigger influence on our lives than recent changes in education. Fifty years ago, education (a. is considered b. was considered c. were considered) 2) ----- by some an unnecessary luxury. Nowadays, however, education isn't just a privilege for the chosen few. Young men and women from all areas of life (a. are becoming b. have becoming c. was becoming) 3) ----- professional and improving their quality of life. This will be beneficial to future generations because a better-educated society is a fairer and (a. most skilled b. more skilled c. skilled) 4) ----- one.

Ironically, however, the change from rural to urban living that drove people to cities in search of better opportunities has led to several modem-day problems. City dwellers have become less healthy. They (a. no longer b. any longer c. far longer) 5)..... eat fresh farm food, and instead, prefer ready meals and fast food.

Even though we are so technologically advanced, we are also foolish. We destroy our forests, build more cars and roads, and eat rubbish. (a. Environmentally b. Environment c. Environmentalists) 6) ----- -- will all tell you that the future looks bleak. Unless we change the way we think, the next fifty years will be very difficult.
