His television had stood in the living room for many years. It was big, black and heavy. It only had three channels and the picture was black and white. He liked his television. Mr. Jones didn't have a computer. His brother bought him a smartphone, but he never used it. He didn't know how to make it work!

In the kitchen, he had a small, old cooker and a noisy white fridge that was nearly as old as Mr. Jones. He had never owned a microwave or a can opener.

Mr. Jones had a big, old bicycle which he rode to the park twice a week. He couldn't drive a car and he didn't like riding on the bus. He loved his bicycle. It was his most useful invention and he cleaned it every day.
