8. Reading: A Cleaner Harbor in the UAE

At Al Noor Harbor in the UAE, students saw plastic bottles and food wrappers floating near the boats. The garbage made the water dirty, and some fish could not move easily through the trash. The students learned that sharks are not always a foe. In a healthy sea, sharks are important because they help keep the food chain balanced. People should respect sharks and should not disturb them.

The harbor committee wanted to reduce pollution. It installed a huge cleaning machine beside the harbor wall. A local current carries floating trash toward a conveyor belt. The belt moves the trash into a collection box. A water wheel helps the machine work, and solar panels provide its power. Every morning, workers check the amount of garbage collected. Then the waste is removed and taken for safe recycling.

Mariam, a student in the project, said, “I think this technology is useful. I feel that everyone should help keep the ocean clean. People shouldn’t throw garbage into the sea, and they should use less plastic.” The machine cannot clean all the oceans, but it makes the water near the harbor safer for fish, boats, and people.
