Skydiving is a very exciting extreme sport. In this sport, people jump from a high airplane and fall through the sky. After a short time, they open a parachute. The parachute helps them land safely on the ground. Many people say skydiving feels like flying like a bird.

Before people try skydiving, they must take special lessons. A trainer teaches them how to jump safely and how to use the parachute. Beginners usually jump with a professional instructor. This is called a tandem jump. The instructor is attached to the student and helps control the jump and landing.

Safety is very important in skydiving. Skydivers wear helmets, goggles, and a strong parachute. They check all their equipment before they jump. They also look at the weather. If it is too windy or stormy, they do not jump. Good weather helps them land safely.

When people jump from the airplane, they feel a strong rush of air. Their heart beats fast, and they feel excited. During free fall, they fall quickly for about one minute. Then they open the parachute. The parachute slows them down, and they float gently to the ground. From the sky, they can see beautiful views like mountains, rivers, and cities.

Skydiving can be dangerous if people do not follow the rules. That is why training and safety equipment are very important. Many people who try skydiving say it helps them become brave and confident. They feel proud after they land safely. For some people, skydiving is not just a sport — it is an unforgettable adventure.
