A News Report about a personal achievement.

I successfully climbed a mountain that is over 2000 meters in January 2022 in Nepal. I had been training with my dad all spring to get ready. I was the first one in my age group to do this achievement.

Climbing a mountain requires a lot of experience and skills. I had been practicing on smaller mountains for a whole season. I used special equipment such as ropes and axes. There were some challenges I had to encounter. The weather on mountains is not stable. As you go higher the temperature can drop below zero and of course oxygen gets thinner.

After I had reached the top , it was great to look down on the forest below. I held the flag of my country at the top to mark this achievement.

A story (unforgettable moment)

Last Friday was a sunny and bright day. It was the perfect time for a day out. " let's go for a picnic." Said my father. We quickly packed our bags, prepared our stuff and jumped into the car. We set out for the countryside. when we got to the camping site, we enjoyed ourselves. We had long walks, climbed trees, fished in the river and took lots of photos. At lunchtime, we put a blanket on the grass and started eating. Suddenly, there was an unexpected freak storm above our heads, so we cleared away our picnic and ran under a nearby tree. " it's not safe here. Let's go back to the car." Said my mother. As soon as we got into the car, we heard a cracking noise. yes, the tree fell down." I can't believe it. What a lucky escape." I said.

Exploring space vs. exploring oceans

It is important to explore new places wisely .Exploring space excites scientists more than what oceans do. But which is better for the humans.

Exploring space is essential to solve some mysteries of the universe. It is also important for communication, and navigation. However, this costs a lot of money and wastes a lot of time.

On the other hand, exploring oceans plays an important role in supporting life on our planet; from the air we breathe and the food we eat to weather and climate patterns.

To sum up, it's better to give more attention, time and money to ocean exploration. That's much more useful and practical to us.
