VI- Reading Comprehension (80 Marks)Read the following passage carefully, then answer the questions that follow:*80

Far away in the countryside, there is a story about a small village called Elmsworth. The people there tell the tale of the Blue Morning, a day when the whole town turned bright blue. Nobody knew how it happened, but it became a story everyone in the village remembers.

The legend says the villagers woke up and were amazed. Some thought the blue was a gift from nature. Others said it might be magic. A few believed it was just something strange about the weather. The news of the Blue Morning spread to nearby villages, and many people came to see the blue town.

Scientists also came to learn about this mystery and solve it. They found out the blue colour came from a bright powder made of minerals. They explained that strong winds carried the powder from a faraway digging place. Rare weather conditions caused the powder to fall evenly over the village. The scientists said it was a very unusual event that probably would not happen again.

Although the streets, rooftops, trees, and even the sheep in the fields were all covered in blue, the villagers decided to celebrate instead of worrying. They started a “Blue Festival” with blue decorations, food, and music. People from other places joined in, and the festival made the village lively and happy. A baker made special “Blueberry Dream” cookies, and children dressed as “Blue Explorers” telling fun stories about that day.

The blue colour washed away with the rain, but the memory of the Blue Morning stayed. Every year, the villagers celebrate the Blue Festival to remember the strange and beautiful day. They decorate their homes in blue and tell the story to visitors.

Whether the story is true or not, it has become a special part of the village’s history. The tale of the Blue Morning shows how something unexpected can bring people joy and inspiration.

A) From a, b, c and d, choose the correct answer: (6 x10 = 60 Marks)

- c. competition
- d. decoration

29. The underlined word “They” in the 4th paragraph refers to:

- a. the fields
- b. the sheep
- c. the villagers
- d. the streets

30. According to the 3rd paragraph, scientists discovered that the blue colour:

- a. would certainly happen again.
- b. covered only some parts of the village.
- c. lasted for years after the Blue Morning.
- d. came from a bright powder made of minerals.

31. According to the passage, all the following statements are TRUE EXCEPT:

VI- Reading Comprehension (80 Marks)

Read the following passage carefully, then answer the questions below:

How do you feel about nature? After spending hours indoors, do you often feel like going outside for a walk? Or if you work for hours at your office desk, do you feel better when you take a break and visit your local park? Most people think that nature is good for us; it is good for our bodies and good for our brains. However, people are spending more time inside and less time outside. For example, the number of visitors to Canada's national parks is getting lower every year. In countries such as the USA, only 10% of teenagers spend time outside every day. Many doctors feel that this is a problem in the twenty-first century, and that it is making our physical health worse.

As a result, some doctors are studying the connection between nature and health: one example of this is the work of Dr. Matilda Bosch in Sweden. The doctor gave people a maths test. During the test, their heart rate was faster. After the test, one group of people sat in a 3D-virtual-reality room for fifteen minutes with pictures and sounds of nature. Their heart rates were slower than people's in the other group. The virtual contact with nature helped them feel more at ease.

Another good example of how nature is good for health comes from Canada. In Toronto, researchers studied 31,000 people living in cities. Overall, they found that healthier people lived near parks.

Because of studies like these, some countries and cities want nature to be part of people's everyday life. In Dubai, there are plans for planting more trees everywhere so people can relax outside with trees, plants and water. In some countries such as Switzerland, 'forest schools' are popular; schoolchildren study their subjects in the forests and do lots of exercise outside. South Korea is another good example: it has new forests near its cities and around 13 million people visit these forests every year. So, after building cities for so long, perhaps it is now time to start rebuilding nature.

A- From a, b, c and d, choose the correct answer : (6X10 = 60 Marks)

Physical therapists (PTs) are specialists that work closely with patients who have body problems. Their injuries may be as minor as having a sore back, or as serious as having broken legs. The physical therapists' job is to evaluate what the patients' problems are and come up with ways to help make them stronger, take their pain away, or teach them to walk and do things themselves again.

One of the most important parts of this job is to be able to communicate well with people of all ages and backgrounds every day. If you want to become a PT, you must talk to people you have never met before and ask them personal questions that help you understand what is wrong. You can't be shy around new people, and you need to be clear in your communications with them.

PTs often choose to study physical therapy because they enjoy listening to people who have had different experiences. If you don't want to spend your time using computers all day or answering telephones at an office job, you could study to be a physical therapist. If you want to be around patients and want to be an important part of helping them recover and change their lives positively, that's the job for you.

To prepare to become a PT, you have to finish your four years of college study. In that time, you will learn all the muscles in the body and all the organs and how they work. You will learn how to find out what is weak and what hurts on people and then how to help them. You will take a lot of amazing classes in biology, chemistry, math, physics, and psychology.

What makes this job interesting is that it combines being active with being a thinker and problem-solver. It is also never boring. You would always be surrounded by amazing people. These determined patients will show you their appreciation and tell you that you have made a difference in their life, and there is no better feeling.

Read the following passage, then do as required:

To keep themselves entertained, people use headphones constantly, and therefore put themselves in serious dangers. Using headphones while crossing roads makes them deaf to the horn sound. Headphones might also cause hearing loss. However, to avoid such unwanted accidents and damage, people should avoid using headphones while crossing roads. People should be made aware of the dangers through signposts and posters. Also, people can be educated against these dangers through newspaper and TV advertisements. At home, parents should warn children against the lengthy usage of headphones. Governments, above all, can impose a fine on people using headphones while crossing streets. It might upset people, but it will help save lives.

According to the Food and Agriculture Organisation, we waste more than a third of the food we produce. A group of graduate students at Lund University wants to change that fact. They have come up with a way to use old fruits and vegetables. They use food that is about to go to waste. It may help people who do not have a lot of access to food.

Food Powder is dried powdered fruits and vegetables, which can be given to people in need after natural disasters. It can also be distributed in low-resource areas where fresh food is difficult to find.

Kent Ngo, one of the students who developed Food Powder, says they are not producing something innovative. Powdered food has been around since the early days of astronauts. The students are rethinking food waste. One group of students went to farmers and sellers to get fruit. Another group of students tested different techniques of drying and powdering the food. They decided on spray drying it, and then changing it into a powder. From there, the students looked at ways to distribute the Food Powder, through government support.

Gerald Perry Marin, a member of the group, grew up in the Philippines. He had seen how hurricanes cut people off from their food supply, and how important it was to have access to food. "Today a bag for humanitarian disasters contains nutrients such as strawberry jam, peanut butter and peas in tomato sauce. We think that an easily transported pack of cheap dried food powder with high nutritional value would be a better choice," Marin says.

The students have got support from the government in the Philippines, and they are currently drying calamansi, a citrus fruit that tastes like a mix of lemon and orange. The students also started working with the United Nations, to try to reach more people and countries that could benefit from the Food Powder project. They are working to use calamansi powder in food products, like cake mixes and ice cream. "I was a bit surprised that the calamansi powder tasted so good," Ngo says. "I can't wait for the mango and pineapple powder."
