Read the following Passage carefully, then answer the questions that follow:

Long ago, people depended mainly on rivers, wells, and rainwater for their needs. However, as cities grew big and populations increased, the need for clean and safe water became bigger. Today, water is considered one of the most important resources for survival. Every living creature depends on it, yet the world still struggles with how to use and protect it wisely as it may run out.

Fresh water makes up a small part of all the water on Earth. Most of it is locked in icebergs or underground, making it difficult to reach. This means that rivers and lakes are the main sources of drinking water for millions of people. Unfortunately, many of these sources are being polluted by human activities. Chemicals from factories, wastewater, and waste from farms are some of the main causes of water pollution. Even plastic waste has entered rivers and seas, creating further danger for fish and humans.

Lack of clean water has serious effects. In many parts of the world, children suffer from diseases as a result of drinking unsafe water. Farmers work hard to grow crops, and many people may be forced to leave their homes in search of cleaner sources of water. In addition, disagreements between countries sometimes rise when rivers or lakes are shared, but their water is not enough. This has made water not only an environmental issue, but also a political one. Countries often argue about how much water each side should be allowed to use, especially in areas where rivers cross borders.

To face this problem, people are turning to new solutions. Some countries have developed desalination plants to remove salt from seawater, making it drinkable. Others are focusing on recycling wastewater, so it can be used again for farming or industry. Schools and groups are also emphasising the importance of water saving through campaigns and workshops. We can help by saving water at home to easily reduce the amount of waste.

Water is not only a resource but also a responsibility. Protecting it means protecting life itself. Unless humans take strong action today, the coming generations may face even more serious water problems in the future.
