Last month, teachers from many countries met in a large hotel in Paris for an important international meeting. They came from Asia, Africa, Europe, and the Middle East. Each group showed projects, pictures, and short videos to share their ideas. Their main goal was to find smart ways to keep our planet clean and safe for future generations.

Kuwait's team spoke about saving water, reducing waste, and teaching families how to recycle at home. A friendly teacher from Japan explained why students walk to school every day; to save energy and keep the air clean. Teachers from Canada showed how people plant new trees quickly after a forest fire, and how children help water them until they grow.

Everyone listened carefully, asked questions, and made clear plans to protect the air, land, and seas. At the end, the leaders gave all the teams small green flags as a prize for their plans. Sara, a student from Kuwait, felt proud and said, "When countries work together, the Earth becomes safer for everyone."
