Apart from his father, perhaps no one expected the young Thomas Edison to become the man whose inventions were countless. As usual, his genius was mistaken for madness by his teacher. The child carried out his experiments most of which ended in a fire and a good beating from his father. In the end, he would lose all his pocket money.

One night, his mother suddenly fell ill. Since his father was absent, the child called a doctor who examined her and said that a quick operation would save her life. However, because the light was dim, he wouldn't be able to do his work and began to leave. The child asked the doctor to wait. He quickly ran to the barber's shop nearby, broke into it and soon returned carrying a big mirror. Then, in a hurry, he brought all the oil lamps he could find in the house and lit them in front of the mirror.

Looking at the child in admiration, the doctor finished the operation and saved her life. While carrying the mirror back, Edison dropped it and it fell to pieces. The barber ran after him and beat him badly. By that time, his father had come back and was told the whole story. Together they quickly went to see the barber who asked for fourteen dollars for the mirror. "Well, I am sorry; here is the money," said Edison's father. "And here are the beatings you gave my son. Now I think this is settled." Later, Thomas Edison made rapid and successful progress in scientific field.
