Language Builder

Explain that saying you like to do something is a general statement. When you say that you want to do something, it means that you want to do it at a specific time. For example, compare I like to eat pizza with I want to eat pizza for lunch.

A

Language Builder

Point out that the verbs need, want, and like are all followed by to + verb, the infinitive form. Let's is followed by the base form of the verb, without to.

Teaching Tip

When doing listening activities, it's important that students know beforehand what they are going to listen for. This is true for most real-life listening as well.

Additional Activity

Dictate a few sentences with the object pronouns him, her, and them for students to write. Say each sentence only once and very quickly. Students write what they can and then compare with a partner. Then say the sentence again more slowly.
