(Yunus—lend small amounts of money to poor people for them to start their own businesses; Jameel—establish job creation programs and/or life is not just about you—it is about what you can do for others)

Muhammed Yunus, Nobel Peace Prize Winner

Muhammed Yunus, often called "the world's banker to the poor," received the Nobel Peace Prize in 2006 for his pioneering work against poverty. Yunus said he would use the $1.35 million prize money to "find more innovative ways" to help the poor.

Yunus founded the Grameen Bank in 1976 with just $27 from his own pocket. The idea came to him while he was teaching economics at Chittagong University in southern Bangladesh, which is one of the poorest nations in the world. He and his students started an experimental project: They lent poor people small amounts of money. The people used the money for their own small businesses; for example, to buy straw to make stools. Until then, the local people relied on local moneylenders who were not always fair.

Since then, the Grameen Bank model has been duplicated in more than 100 countries. Today, the bank has 6.61 million borrowers and over 2,400 branches in over 80,000 villages in Bangladesh. Recently the bank started a program to give poor people a loan of about $9 to purchase small items such as bread, candy, pickles, and toys. Receivers of the loans then resell the goods to supplement their income. The bank reports that it has lent $6.55 billion over the past 30 years and claims a high repayment rate—98 percent. Nowadays Grameen Banks are also in developed countries. One hundred people in Queens, New York, were among the first borrowers of Grameen America. The total number of borrowers worldwide is 7.84 million.

Mohammed Abdul Latif Jameel, Businessman and Philanthropist

Mohammed Abdul Latif Jameel has received many awards for his humanitarian work to solve the crisis of poverty around the world. In 2012, he was named "Saudi Volunteer of the Year" for establishing job creation programs in Saudi Arabia and the Middle East. Unemployment is the main cause of poverty, and Jameel realizes that governments need the support of businesses to solve the problem. Jameel says, "My father taught me an important lesson in running a business: never to forget that life is not just about you—it is about what you can do for others."

Jameel studied at MIT where he joined the Poverty Action Lab. In 2005, he made a huge donation to the organization, and it was renamed J-PAL in honor of his father, Abdul Latif Jameel. J-PAL is a group of expert researchers whose mission is to reduce poverty in the world by finding scientifically-based solutions. In Saudi Arabia he established the Abdul Latif Jameel Community Initiatives program (ALJCI). One project of ALJCI is Bab Rizq Jameel (BRJ), which focuses on creating job opportunities. Between 2003 and 2012, BRJ created more than 230,000 jobs in the Kingdom and over 300,000 in the Middle East. ALJCI also supports projects in business financing, education and training, health, and art and culture.

It will make him more independent and confident, and it will also give him time to make responsible decisions about his future. What do you think?

To help people make decisions like these, you need to ask some questions:

- What kind of person is he? Is he a person who is lazy? Is he a person who is adventurous?
- What does he like to do? Does he like to do something that is exciting? Does he like to do something that is boring?
- What does he want to do? Does he want to do something that is important? Does he want to do something that is helpful?

WHAT SHOULD THEY DO?

Answer the questions.

1. What job does Saeed have now?

Saeed has an important job with a computer company.

2. What does Saeed want to be? Why?

Saeed wants to be a teacher because he wants to help kids and spend more time with his own kids.

3. Why don't Khalid's parents want him to travel for a year?

His parents say that traveling will distract him and delay his studies.

4. Should Khalid go to university or travel for a year? Why?

Culture Notes

Explain that the practice of banking has been around for at least 2,000 years. In ancient Egypt, Babylonia, and Greece, people put silver and gold in banks to keep it safe. Around 600 B.C.E., banking was developed to become more similar to what it is today. With the expansion of industry and trade in the late 18th and 19th centuries, the banking industry grew rapidly. Nations developed their own banking systems based on their own distinctive economic and social customs.

The Nobel Peace Prize is awarded every year on December 10 in Oslo, Norway. The award is given to an individual, or individuals, who have helped significantly to lessen conflict between nations or to develop a better world for all.

fun facts

- The World Health Organization estimates that about one third of the world is well-fed, one third of the world is under-fed or under-nourished, and one third of the world is starving.

What would Muhammed Yunus use the $1.35 million prize money for

Muhammed Yunus, Nobel Peace Prize Winner

Muhammed Yunus, often called "the world's banker to the poor," received the Nobel Peace Prize in 2006 for his pioneering work against poverty. Yunus said he would use the $1.35 million prize money to "find more innovative ways" to help the poor.

Yunus founded the Grameen Bank in 1976 with just $27 from his own pocket. The idea came to him while he was teaching economics at Chittagong University in southern Bangladesh, which is one of the poorest nations in the world. He and his students started an experimental project: They lent poor people small amounts of money. The people used the money for their own small businesses; for example, to buy straw to make stalks. Until then, the local people relied on local moneylenders who were not always fair.

- .Start a business
- .Find more innovative ways to help the poor
- .Buy a new car and a house

The Grameen Bank gives poor people a loan of about $9 to purchase small items such as bread, candy, pickles, and toys. Receivers of the loans then resell the goods to supplement their income.

Further research is needed to better understand the long-term effects of environmental pollutants on the development of the brain and cognitive function. Long-term studies are needed to determine the effects of exposure to environmental pollutants on the brain and cognitive function.

Charity societies

- ▶ We can't ignore the important role played by charity societies in the life of poor people. We should bear in mind that it is a great topic to shed light on. First of all, let's know what charity societies are. They are organizations established by rich and kind-hearted people. Those people highly sympathize with the sufferings of the poor. They hold back nothing to give hope as well as help.
- ▶ They exert all effort to enable poor and homeless children to enjoy a better life. They gather street children who have no families and house them. They provide all aspects of care for them. They provide them with medical, physical and psychological care. They also teach them. They give them great care until they grow up.
- ▶ In brief, we all should be hand in hand and donate what we can afford to support these societies.
