8 Conversation

two women, Amal and Sarah, talk about the young man, Kareem.

Who is the young man?
Do you think he's in his home?

What was the problem with Kareem?
He stayed for three months and wasn't a good guest.

Amal: So, has your nephew left yet?

Sarah: Yes, Kareem has already gone. At long last!

Amal: How long did he stay?

Sarah: Almost three months. He was doing a research project here at the university. When he arrived, I said, "Make yourself at home." And he did just that.

Amal: But he seemed like such a nice young man.

Sarah: Oh, he is, and I was happy to help out. The trouble is that he took over our house. He used our things and never put them back. He never cleaned up after himself, and I've never seen anyone eat so much! One day I walked into the living room, and there was Kareem eating and making a mess, with his feet on the furniture...

Amal: That's a bit too much, isn't it?

Sarah: That's what I thought.

Amal: So what did you say to him?

Real Talk

At long last! = Finally!

That's a bit too much. = This has gone too far.

العامية

Who says At long last? (Sarah)

Why does she say it? (She wanted Kareem to leave for a long time before he did.)

☺ other situations in which people might say At long last;

for example,

when a package that was mailed weeks ago finally arrives.

↪ Who says That's a bit too much? (Amal)

What was a bit too much? (Kareem was eating in the living room and making a mess, with his feet on the furniture.)

Does Sarah mind that Kareem was eating in the living room? (yes)

two situations in which one someone is likely to say That's a bit too much.

For example:

☺ Someone borrowed your brother's car for two days but returned it with a full tank of gas and thanked him.

Or, ☹ Someone borrowed your brother's car for one day and returned it with no gas.

(the second)

Teaching Tip

If you are creating an assignment, try completing it yourself before giving it to students. Sometimes activities that seem clear and easy are actually too complicated or incomplete. By trying an activity yourself first, you can be sure that it is clear, complete, and useful for students.

Additional Activity

In groups, students talk about what they would miss the most and the least about living away from home. Have them make lists and share them with the class.

fun facts

In order to be a polite and responsible houseguest who doesn't overstay his or her welcome, take note of the following advice from professionals: 1) Always help with household chores; 2) Be sure to help pay for groceries and meals; 3) Clean up after yourself; 4) Send your hosts a thank-you card or small gift; and 5) Make sure you give your hosts some privacy.
