WHAT IS PERSONAL COMMUNICATION ?

TECHNOLOGY ACTIVITY 13

The communication between sender and receiver is known as personal communication. The means of personal communication are:

- Telephone
- Telegraph
- Postal system

PERSONAL COMMUNICATION

POST

The postal service enables us to send letters, postcards and small packages to people.

It is a public service and the price depends on the weight of the letter or package, and on where we want to send it to.

There are also private courier companies that send letters and packages.

THE TELEPHONE

The telephone enables us to talk to a person who is far away from us.

To talk to this person, we need two telephones, both connected to the telephone network.

Telephones can be fixed, cordless or mobile. They have three parts:

- A receiver for listening to the other person.
- A microphone for speaking into.
- A keypad for dialing the number.

THE PARTS OF A PHONE

The keypad of a telephone has at least ten keys with numbers from 0 to 9.

HOW DO LETTERS AND PACKAGES TRAVEL?

THINK AND ANSWER

- Have you ever sent a letter? _____
- What do we use postal service for nowadays? _____

THE FAX MACHINE

We use a fax machine to send and receive written documents, photos or drawings through the telephone network.

To send a document, we have to insert paper into the fax machine and dial the number.

In a few minutes the recipient receives a copy of the document in his or her fax machine.

White paper to receive documents through the fax machine.

A keypad to dial the recipient's number.

Telephone receiver

Place to insert documents to be sent.

Screen for messages.

Information is sent by fax through the telephone network.

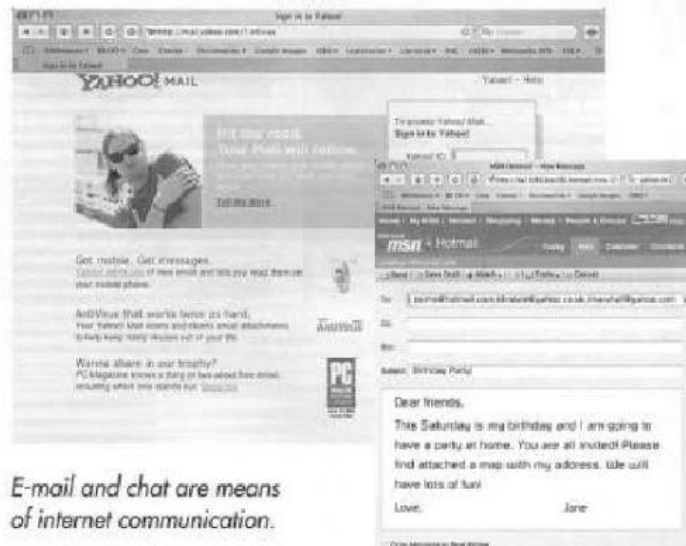

E-MAIL AND CHAT SERVICES

E-mail (electronic mail) enables us to send and receive written documents, images and sounds.

To have access to e-mail, we need to use a computer connected to the internet.

Both the sender and the recipient need an e-mail address.

Chat rooms enable us to exchange messages instantly with other people connected to the internet.

E-mail and chat are means of internet communication.
