Learning Content:VILLAGES*What are villages like?

Villages are rural areas with a small population of fewer than 10,000 people.

The main characteristics of villages are:

The buildings are low, usually with only one or two floors. One family lives in each house.

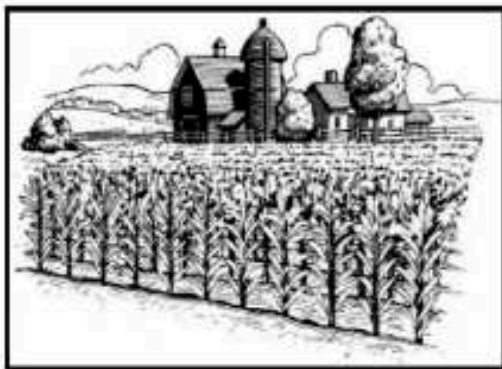

In many villages today, there are housing estates, with groups of houses that look very similar.

Most people know each other because the population is small.

The streets are short and narrow and they usually lead to the main square in the center of the village. The most important buildings, for example, the village hall or the church, are in the main square.

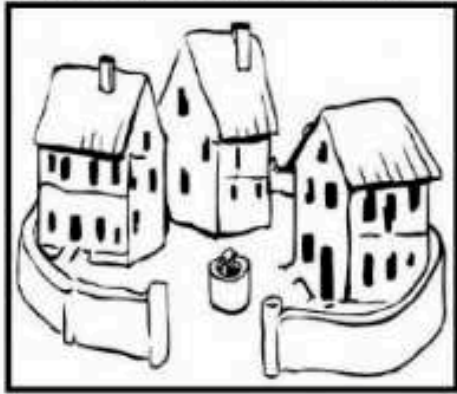

There are farms and farmland just outside the village. If the village is on the coast, there is sometimes a small harbor for fishing boats.

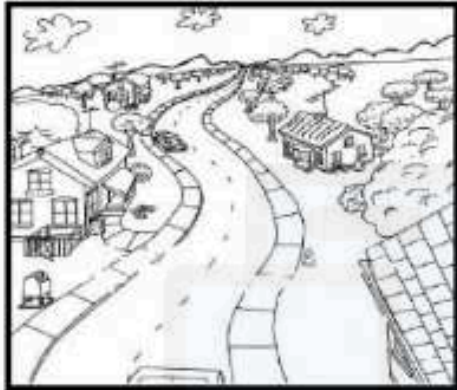

Types of Villages

There are different types of villages in different landscapes:

Villages around a square.

The streets go from the square and the houses are grouped together. These villages are usually on plains.

Villages along a road.

They have a straight main road. The houses are built along it. These villages are usually on plains.

Villages made up of isolated houses.

The houses are separate from each other. These villages are usually in mountain landscapes.

Life in Villages

Life in villages is usually quiet and there is not much traffic. There are not many schools or shops.

Most people live in houses. Many people in villages work in farming. Many young people leave their village to find work in towns and cities.
