The Development of the Camera

In 1877, George Eastman, who worked in a bank, wanted to take photographs on holiday. (11) _____, he was very disappointed to discover that the only cameras available were very large and heavy, and also required (12) _____ use of complicated equipment. Eastman realised that many other people wanted to take photographs but were prevented from doing so. What was needed was a simple, hand-held camera, and so in his spare time, he began to experiment. After many hours of planning and (13) _____ of hard work, he was finally ready to open a factory, hoping he would succeed (14) _____ producing an easy-to-use camera in 1888. It was a small rectangular box and inside was a roll of special paper. This paper was sensitive to light and replaced the heavy pieces of glass that (15) _____ before. When the roll was finished, the camera (16) _____ be sent back to the factory in New York which was the only place where the photographs were developed and printed at that time. The following year, a transparent film was (17) _____ which enabled people to print the photos easily as it was better than the paper roll. This could be removed (18) _____ the photographer and taken to a local centre for developing. The camera was a huge success and within a few years Eastman became (19) _____. But he was a generous man and during his lifetime, he gave away millions of dollars to support many (20) _____ institutions.
